

1.

Now that you're familiar with how to write a use case, you can apply this knowledge to your own design work. To get started, revisit your third portfolio project. Consider your user personas, and review each persona's goals and needs.

Next, define a distinct use case for your website as compared to your mobile app. To guide your work, answer the following questions:

What are your users' motivations and goals?

How should your companion website support them?