

1. What are some key tips for building rapport with an interviewer? Select all that apply.

0.75 / 1 point

☒ Be curious

☒ Correct
Be yourself, be genuine, and be curious! Keeping an open mind creates opportunities for you to learn more about the person you're communicating with, the job you're interviewing for, and the company you're considering joining.

☒ Be yourself

☒ Correct
Be yourself, be genuine, and be curious! Actively share about yourself to build a relationship, while also being professional and respectful of the interviewer's personal boundaries.

☒ Be genuine

☒ Correct
Be yourself, be genuine, and be curious! Be your authentic, professional self, and represent your work and your values honestly.

☒ Be defiant

☐ This should not be selected
Be yourself, be genuine, and be curious! Being confident is good, but being defiant can get be an issue.

2. Why should you be curious to build rapport with your interviewer? Select all that apply.

0 / 1 point

☒ Leads to having better, more insightful questions

☒ Correct
You can learn more about the people you'd be working with and how they feel about the organization. It can also create opportunities to learn more about the job you're interviewing for and the company you're considering joining.

☒ Creates more opportunities to learn about the person you're communicating with

☒ Correct
It creates opportunities to learn more about the job you're interviewing for and the company you're considering joining. It can also lead to having better, more insightful questions because you can learn more about the people you'd be working with, and how they feel about the organization.

☒ Professional representation of a designer's personal brand

☐ This should not be selected

You should be curious to build rapport with your interviewer because it can create opportunities to learn more about the job you're interviewing for and the company you're considering joining. It can also lead to having better, more insightful questions because you can learn more about the people you'd be working with, and how they feel about the organization.

☒ Identifies other opportunities that may be available if this role doesn't fit

☐ This should not be selected

You should be curious to build rapport with your interviewer because it can create opportunities to learn more about the job you're interviewing for and the company you're considering joining. It can also lead to having better, more insightful questions because you can learn more about the people you'd be working with, and how they feel about the organization.

3. Identify actions a designer should take to prepare themselves before an interview.
Select all that apply.

0.8 / 1 point

☒ Determine and prepare answers to common interview questions

☒ Correct

To best prepare for interviews, designers can prepare answers to common questions asked during interviews. They can also explore requirements and expectations, build a knowledge base about the company, and build a narrative before an interview.

☒ Build a knowledge base about the company

☒ Correct

Consider researching questions that explore the company's mission statement, or the company culture. Designers can also explore requirements and expectations, determine and prepare answers to common interview questions, build a knowledge base about the company, and build a narrative before an interview.

☒ Explore requirements and expectations

☒ Correct

Designers can explore the requirements and expectations of a UX design role by reaching out to professional networks and communities, or scanning the job description in detail. They can also determine and prepare answers to common interview questions, build a knowledge base about the company, and build a narrative before an interview.

☒ Build rapport with interviewers

☐ This should not be selected

Building rapport with interviews is important, but it's not an action that will prepare a designer for an interview. Instead, a designer can explore requirements and expectations, determine and prepare answers to common interview questions, build a knowledge base about the company, and build a narrative before an interview.

☒ Build a narrative

Correct

Preparing a narrative that speaks to a designer's personal brand, and who they are is an important preparation step. Designers can also explore requirements and expectations, determine and prepare answers to common interview questions, and build a knowledge base about the company.