

≡ Item Navigation

Final designs of the dog walker app in Figma

As you've learned throughout the certificate program, the UX design process is iterative, which means you'll rework your designs as you gather more feedback to better address users' needs. But at some point, you have to consider your designs as final and hand them off to an engineering team.

Here are the final designs of the dog walker app that you've followed along with throughout the certificate program.

You might notice that the icons in these pages look slightly different from the ones shown in the demo video. These icons are from a shareable sticker sheet that is publicly available and undergoes regular updates. That's one benefit of using a collaborative tool—people are constantly working to improve the designs!

Google UX Design Certificate - Final Dog Walker App Designs.pdf

PDF File

To check out the final designs for the dog walker app up close, you download this PDF document which shows each screen of the dog walker app on it's own full size page.

