Peer Review Success

Now that you've learned about personal personas, it's time to make your first one for your portfolio project. Once you've completed your persona, you will submit it to be graded by one of your peers through the peer review process.
As a professional you will be an active participant in the five phases of design sprints (understand, ideate, decide, prototype, and test) and creative collaboration is at the core of every phase. You will have the opportunity in this course and beyond to practice collaboration by giving and receiving feedback, an integral part of every UX designer's role.

Peer reviews provide you and your classmates the opportunity to give and receive practical feedback as you develop artifacts for your professional portfolio, just like you would do as an entry level UX designer.

Tips for successful peer reviews:

- Make your work original and unique to you

- Be sure to provide a sharable link to your work

- Keep checking back over time to review others' work

- Don't be too critical or focus too heavily on the negative when reviewing others' work

- Find a balance between commenting on what you like and what could use improvement

Reminder:

If you have a question, chances are, you're not alone. Reach out in the discussion forum to chat and ask for help from other learners taking this program. You can search through existing threads or start a new one with peers about a topic you want to learn more about. You can also visit Coursera's Global Online Community ↗. Other important things to know can be found in the Coursera Honor Code ↗ and the Code of Conduct ↗.

Mark as completed